We find not the least difficulty in their cultivation or propagation, nor indeed in any of the other species that were supposed so difficult to cultivate. The small figure at the bottom of Mr. Andrewss plate, given as a different variety, we suspect to be nothing more than a very weak plant of the present with an imperfect flower. We find it succeed very well in a warm part of the greenhouse, planted in small pots in an equal portion of turfy loam, peat, and sand, watering it only when quite dry, and not at all when in a dormant state. Cuttings strike root readily, but they must remain quite dry when first planted till the wound is dried up; they. may then be watered regularly, and they...
