The summer passed away all too quickly, but the girls did not weary of their work. Every Sunday the tastefully arranged flowers spoke of their loving thought, and hundreds of hearts were gladdened by the fragrant blossoms that they weekly sent to the hospitals. A bright thought came to Nettie one day as they were arranging the bouquets. Wouldn t it be nice if we could each start some slips of plants in little pots, and have them in a flourishing condition by September? Then when the industrial school opens again, we could send a plant to each scholar. I am sure they would enjoy having them in their homes and watching the blossoms come out. Capital! Ted cried enthusiastically, and all the other girls expressed their unanimous satisfaction with the plan. To plan was to accomplish,...
