Not illustrated. 1874 Excerpt: . see why his son should want more than he had; his practical view of the matter is that the boy is much better helping to plough, hoe or weed than perhaps idling away his time over books; he never learns to read properly or never can decipher a few weeks after he has been withdrawn from the village school. It is undeniable that efforts are making to bestow means and opportunities of education, and I can bear most favora makiTf efirtS nW ble testimony tflat a number of boys in this district receive a sound and well grounded education in the rudiments of reading, writing and arithmetic; but until the prejudices of the people are overcome by solid testimony of what education does for the scholar in the way of helping him to earn a livelihood, until the subordinate local officers are largely selected from persons educated in the district, the thirst for knowledge will increase but slowly. I consider scholarships, money payments as rewards for regular attendance at school, should be liberally dispensed, especially to boys who have arrived at an age when their parents are anxious to remove them from school that they may earn something towards the cost of their own maintenance. In a country where greed and ignorance go hand in hand pecuniary incentives are not only valuable but necessary aids to the dissemination of knowledge. Below is given a detailed statement of the number of schools and scholars in the...
