This is not a structure characterizing any important ore deposit, and was not seen in place. But it is of interest in view of the possible light that it may throw on the processes by which the vein-forming materials are deposited. The structure is best exemplified by fragments on the dump of the Pride of Syracuse mine and on an upper dump of the Empire-group, Sultan Mountain. In the latter case the septa are composed chiefly of sphalerite and galena, and the cells are lined with drusy quartz and in some cases filled with rhodochrosite. Beautiful little crystals of amber-colored sphalerite and of tetrahedrite were observed in some of the cells, implanted upon quartz. It is possible that this cellular structure may have resulted from some kind of pseudomorphous replacement coupled with the solution and removal of some unknown mineral. n. Spherulitic structure.--The quartz of a vein has crystallized in prisms, often imperfectly formed, which show a marked tendency to group themselves in radial fashion about local centers of crystallization. It is not intended to treat specially under this head such minerals as tremolite, which exhibits characteristically a radial structure. A rough spherulitic crystallization, previously described by Purington, i was noted in the gold quartz of the Tomboy mine and, in connection with banding, in the Camp Bird lode.
